A: The last line in the log says "This computer is not able to talk to 0.4.2.22 for admin rights". Assuming 0.4.2.22 is the IP address the remote computer is attached to, then the remote computer has a problem where it doesn't have permissions to authenticate with the application server. If you installed the application server manually, try installing it again so that it can create a new folder in the specified location, giving the new server rights to access the folder. Try creating the folder yourself first so that it is known to exist. If you can't create a folder (or the security settings don't allow it) then you'll have to talk with the administrator of the remote server and ask them to allow administrative rights for the application. As for why the error occurs, we have to assume that something went wrong on the remote computer's side because it didn't have administrative rights to install the application server. It could be a connection issue (e.g., the wrong IP address, failure to connect, failure to authenticate) but I think that the error line is the most likely culprit.
