It was developed by EA Canada and published by Electronic Arts under the EA Sports label. It was released on 15 September 2004. The game is a World Cup edition and features the following teams: Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Cameroon, Chile, China, Colombia, England, France, Germany, Ghana, Greece, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Netherlands, Northern Ireland, Paraguay, Portugal, Romania, Russia, Scotland, Sweden, South Korea, Spain, Uruguay and Wales. There are 99 players to choose from, but none are old World Cup veterans like Brazil 1994 goalkeeper Bruce Grobbelaar. (There's no Tim Howard!) This is the year that EA Sports promises to 'reinvent the game', with a new engine that will make it more difficult for players to cheat. There is also a 'sport mode' that allows the player to work their way through the qualification process, the group stages and into the knock-out rounds of the tournament. Gameplay and commentary are by former England striker and pundit Gary Lineker and Italian superstar Francesco Totti. FIFA Soccer 2005 will also feature the following modes: Team Management, World Player Search, Single Match, Career Mode, Tournament Mode, Manager Mode and Coaching Mode. Team Management lets the player prepare their side for the World Cup, including adding a squad of 21 players. World Player Search lets the player fill the squad with real or virtual team-mates, but this mode is more about customization than true player creation. The Single Match mode is a decent enough playground where the player can test their skills against various opposition to see how they cope on the world stage. Career Mode lets the player play their way through the qualification process for the World Cup, while Tournament Mode is the real drawcard with a World Cup simulation that tests the players ability to compete with the best in the world. Manager Mode lets the player take charge of a real or virtual team, while the Coaching mode lets the player take charge of their own team and play them like a coach.
